

QUEER CANAL FOLK.

Peculiarities of a People Exactly Like Whom There is No Other.

GEORGE SMITH AND HIS CRUSADE

In Behalf of a Class Whose Condition He Has Much Bettered.

THEIR SAGE, PHILOSOPHER AND FRIEND

(CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH.)

CHICK, ENGLAND, Nov. 6.—Here in this little English village, six miles off the sunny way from the noble school-town of Rugby, lives one of the most noted and certainly one of the worthiest men of England. I am his friend and guest.

It is an humble abode, three three-century old cabins merged into one, with gabled roof, huge fireplaces, low ceilings, tiny windows, and all manner of mysterious cubby-holes, nooks and passages, and with three of the sweetest women in England, mother and two lovely maidens, to give the quaint old place unending love and joy.

It is not the first time I have been here at Chick. It is my only home spot in a foreign land. When tired of wandering up and down the face of Britain, here is where I come for rest and repose. It is a delight in old, old Chick, rest, because it is one of the few of English villages which stands just as it always stood, where the pace of the workaday world's activities never comes; where the steeple of the church, the graveyard, the decayed manor house, the huge stone dovecotes which house 500 families of doves, the hatched farm laborer, the simple village folk, all invite to repose and delight, because, with my host and friend, George Smith, of Coalville, sage, philosopher and philanthropist, we wander among English lanes, find old paths over English fields, hunt out English antiquities, visit English legends, talk of and visit the Gypsies and all the other things which know and love; and altogether lead a life, for the few days we are happily together, untroubled with envy, untroubled by ambition and ill-will, in the loftiest friendship and humbleness content.

A True Children's Friend.

All good men and women who believe in the bettering of the world through the saving of its man-forsaken and alone forsaken children, would find something of this man, George Smith, of Coalville, as he is everywhere in England called. No other Englishman, perhaps no other man, ever accomplished so much for the children. He was born to a brickworker's life in 1811. His father before him was a brickworker. The boy grew up in the misery and drudgery of the English brickyards. While still a lad of 7 years, his labor, like thousands of other brickyard children, was to continually carry 40 pounds of clay on his back, and to walk the distance around the earth in the same old table on which the bricks were made. Before his father had reached 18 years of age he had traveled nearly four times the distance around the earth in the same old table on which the bricks were made.

He realized the brutality and misery which he suffered, and with which all brickyard children were surrounded, with a purpose. With every spare moment he ministered to emancipate himself and his kind. From the extra few secured by watching the brickyard men at their work, he got four years' night schooling and a few books. When he had reached man's estate he became the "George Smith, of Coalville," whose name all England now knows almost as a household word, by securing the management of a small red-brick yard at that place. He made the owners rich, but eventually lost the place, and in the processless agitation in behalf of the brickyard children.

Grand Battle Against Big Odds.

It is a long, heart-breaking story, that of his starvation, suffering, contumely and hardships, until he made all England his home. His grand battle for these helpless ones was made along all lines in marvelous and sympathetic simplicity, but with the tremendous force of personal suffering. He will carry to his grave the scars of hurt and wrong that the children for whom he pleaded were enduring. He had something to tell of England's "English brickyard children," and he "balked it out," as he himself says in his work, "The Cry of the Children From the Brickyards of England," in all its largeness and slowness. To find, he found, as he had 7 years, 20,000 girls and boys, many more youthful than himself, in a condition of abuse, horrible slavery, vice, ignorance and misery, impossible for the pen of even genius to describe. He worked, started and battled 30 years for these children, and finally on the 16th of August, 1871, heard the voice of the Speaker of the House of Commons ring out: "The eyes have it!" on the passage of a bill, which became the fifth clause of the "Factory and Workshop (Children) Amendment Act," gave him the enthusiastic congratulations of the greatest men of England; led Lord Salisbury to exclaim: "Bless God for his grace and his efforts!" and he had achieved for him the first great victory of his life. Alone and unaided one brickyard graduate had rescued 30,000 fellows from the slavery and degradation of England, and he had made the world's conscience indelibly and blighting form of child labor; while the actual result was to send, on January 1, 1872, 20,000 half-oaked children out of the brick and tile yards to school, and forever profit girls tender to be employed in this form of labor.

Crusade for Canal-Boat Children.

But George Smith, of Coalville, had only begun. His second crusade was in behalf of the canal-boat children. As a boy slave, he had toiled in brickyards about the canals. In these boats and barges he saw thousands more children employed in a drudgery equally degrading, and living in a condition infinitely more loathsome. Perhaps 125,000 persons, men, women and children, were employed in navigating some 25,000 boats, over nearly 5,000 miles of canals and navigated rivers in England. They did not throng railway stations. They were in secluded places; and even literature had woven a poetic glamor about them. Their poor children had never seen the light. They were growing up in the stuffy cabins almost like wild beasts. Thrashed, kicked, beaten with ropes, sticks and heavy iron boots, many became blind, deaf, dumb, and they died. Blasphemous, drunkards, thieves, incest, and incurable degradation among these folk were universal. These children, first determined to rescue these lost brethren, as he had rescued the canal-boat children. He wrote thousands of letters and circulated hundreds of cables along canal banks, stirred the newspapers and besieged Parliament; and all the while himself and family were numberless times suffering for bread. Finally, in 1875, he managed to publish his book "Our Canal Boat Population." With this he made England stand still and listen again. In 1876 he had succeeded in enlisting the government so far that it instituted official inquiries and took evidence; and then he was asked to frame a bill. This was "blocked" in all manner of ways in committee, and for a time the measure seemed lost; but on the final day of the session of Parliament in August, 1877, but not until Home Secretary Cross had been called to Osborne House for an interview concerning the matter with the Queen, who has always been sympathetically and practically a friend of this unlettered philanthropist, his second great triumph for England's children was achieved, and the bill was unanimously passed—while, half fainting with anxiety, and with not a sixpence in his pocket, he sat in the speaker's gallery shaking God for what had been accomplished.

Reforms in a Right Direction.

Briefly, this bill provided for the registration of canal boats in England by the sanitary authorities precisely the same as any residence habitation, which absolutely abolished the former abominable disease breeding and carrying character of the tiny crafts. It brought all the 800 canal boat children under the education act, so that by a system of passbooks they were enabled to attend any school where they might be temporarily tarrying. It abolished the inspection on the part of local authorities, all possibility of improper relations of canal boat folk who had heretofore been under no authority and answerable in the diminitive cabins, and it resulted in placing three-fourths of the entire canal-folk of England in homes along the canal banks. Evil, of course, still exist; but the change for the better has been of a marvelous character.

All the English midland canals are of far less capacity than our own. The bottoms are in the form of an inverted arch; and the locks are only seven feet wide. Consequently canal boats here are very diminutive. They are usually only from 25 to 30 feet long, 6 feet and 6 inches wide, 65 feet long, and with only 3 feet of keel. The cabins are therefore scarcely one-fourth the size of those of our boats. They are 3 feet wide and high and 8 feet long. From 3 to 4 feet of their height protrudes above the deck. The exposed sides are always covered with most wonderful paintings, representing the highest expression of art among these lowly folk; and a dog-kennel invariably surmounts the decorated cabin sides, with most wonderful painting of a bed for the boatman and wife; a bunk beneath for the children; a stove, locker and hanging table, with an extraordinary collection of crockery; and cooking utensils considering the space; and opposite, is a bench which is the parlor and dining room by day, and bonfire for a grown-up son or daughter, or a hotbed of dishes.

Like the Gypsies, the English canal folk live well, but everything is boiled. Hodgepodge of beef and herrings, with the vegetables, which are set for a song, or the pulling, along their pleasant way, are the favorite. In former times, when their condition was more heathenish, their food, and all their household affairs, were on a level with beasts. They are now more intelligent, independent, and as a consequence better paid. More than two-thirds live in villages, which are set for a song, or the pulling, along their pleasant way, are the favorite. Talk of the Town. Two large show windows literally packed with loose diamonds and also mounted with jewelry, including rings, bracelets, pendants, necklaces, rings and studs. The elegant display and sale will continue all this week, and I cordially invite the public to go without change of transfer for safe and large returns from their fruit lands. It offers the kindest climate in the world to the feeble and debilitated; and it is reached in the most comfortable manner over the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad. Pullman vestibule sleeping cars leave Chicago by this line every day in the year, and without change of transfer through to San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. This is a feature not offered by any other line. Write to Charles T. Appleby, Traveling Passenger Agent, Room 303, Bank of Commerce Building, Pittsburg, Pa., if you desire any further information as to the country and the accommodations for reaching it.

Three Trials Yesterday and Two Murder Cases to Come. In Criminal Court yesterday John Drew was convicted of receiving stolen goods. The articles in question were a set of harness stolen from William Caffrey by John Gamble.

Enoch Jones, of Braddock, was tried for misdemeanor for selling liquor to the husband of Sabina Biggin, the prosecutrix. He was found not guilty, but was ordered to pay the costs.

William Kirkland was tried for misdemeanor for the alleged appropriation of partnership funds. The information was made by George Otto. They composed the firm of Kirkland & Otto, dealers in butter and eggs in Baldwin township. Kirkland was charged with taking $85. The jury is out.

Henry Acklin and George Morris will be placed on trial Monday for the murder of Jerry E. Buckley, during a fight at Sharpshooter recently.

On Wednesday Thomas McMahon will be tried for the murder of Xavier Staphilin, at Walker's Mills.

Denies All His Charges. Mrs. Catharine Gavenna yesterday filed an answer to the suit for a divorce brought by her husband, John Gavenna. She denies the charges made by her husband, and claims that she did not embitter his life by her violent temper, nor did she beat him and put him out of the house and refuse to live with him. On the contrary, she was living with him when the subpoena in divorce was served on her. For his part, he has cruelly ill treated her and has not supported her. She demands a jury trial and alimony.

SMILING THROUGH GRIEF.

In Spite of the Worries Which All Women Have, They Appear Well and Happy—How to Make This Apparent Happiness Real.

"You said an eminent physician recently, 'I do not think I exaggerate when I say that one-half of the suffering and sickness which exists among women might and should be avoided.' "How? Listen and I will tell you. Pains and weakness and the little aches, which no man other than a physician suspects, frequently combine to make women more or less miserable. Yet they come up smiling nearly always, hiding beneath their seeming happiness an infinity of mental and physical tortures. This is all wrong. Woman was born to brightness and happiness; she needs strength to resist her many trials. Her body, her mind and all her faculties and functions must be put into a healthy condition or she cannot secure strength, and where nature fails she must be assisted. Here is where stimulants prove so valuable.

"Yes, I mean spirits, but not the spirits of the saloon; and while I recommend whiskey as the best and most useful of spirits, I am always most careful to impress upon my patients the necessity of obtaining it absolutely pure, as impure whiskey is worse than nothing." It has been agreed by the leading scientists and physicians of the day that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is absolutely pure. The proper use of it will strengthen the nerves, blood and body. It is not a beverage, but is designed for medicinal use. It stimulates all the faculties of the body and mind, adds energy and strength and builds up waste tissue, may be obtained from your druggist or grocer. In justice to yourself see that you obtain the genuine. Pure Malt Whiskey, and do not be satisfied with any substitute which may be offered as just as good.
